

First is to recognize any thoughtless speech we have that shows disrespect to another religion. We can also recognize the ways in which there is agreement and possible cooperation on actions in which we have common ground.

~Maia

We can look for ways to love and serve one another in common outreach programs; join in their celebration of religious holidays, attend their worship services, take classes on their faith and stand up for them when someone ignorantly attacks them.

~Bob

For myself, as a Christian, I can continue to live my life in a way that embraces diversity rather than in a way that separates me from those who think, live and believe differently than I do. I have often heard the phrase "you may be the only Bible a person ever reads"...so it is up to me to try to live a life that shows radical love.
